A Time of Renewal

Tell your heart to beat again...Close your eyes and breathe it in
Let the shadows fall away...Step into the light of grace
Yesterday's a closing door, you don't live there anymore
Say goodbye to where you've been and tell your heart to beat again
Danny Gokey

The tulip bulbs are peeking through, the weather is warming up and we have more light to our days. We leave behind the dark, cold months of winter and spring is now at our doorstep. Springtime is the season of renewal, but it can also be a season of doubt. After all, for something to be made new and fresh, it first has to have gotten old and worn.

Feeling sad during spring is understandable. We are reminded that there will be a time, soon, or perhaps later, when we have to move forward. Just as we must shrug off winter, so too must we begin focusing on the life ahead instead of the life behind. We can’t take our lost loved ones into this new season, except in memory and heart, and this realization can bring us new pain.

However, if we look deep into our broken hearts, we will find something that looks and feels a lot like spring. We will find that there is still a hope for a good life, for a happy life. Renewed life is not just a choice you make, it is an opportunity you are given. This renewed sense of life is not something you can force, but it is something you open yourself to, something you come to trust; and as you learn to trust you take another step toward your healing. This is the legacy of grief’s springtime. As your outlook toward the future begins to change, so does your outlook toward the past. You focus less on death and more on life, especially the parts of life that your loved one gave you and gives you still. You find that the unfolding of the grief process reminds you that you will survive. It reminds you that life has changed, and as with all change, growth emerges. And if you have not yet reached the “springtime” of your grief journey, just as with the seasons, you can know and hopefully be encouraged that spring will come. You will reach this step in your journey.

This spring may not feel quite as warm as you would like at this moment, but, there is a shift in the atmosphere that we can all appreciate and feel. You can have a renewed sense of life again...

The group will meet on Thursdays from May 12, 2016 through June 16, 2016 from 3:30 to 5:00 pm at St. Luke’s Priscilla Payne Hurd Education Center, St. Luke’s Bethlehem Campus, 801 Ostrum Street, Bethlehem, PA 18015 (building is located in front of Priscilla Payne Hurd annex of the hospital). Soaring Spirits is a national program with the one goal of supporting and connecting widowed people with each other. It is designed to be a safe place for widowed individuals to begin the process of rebuilding their lives. The Soaring Spirits programs are not focused on the losses their community has experienced, rather on the life they still have ahead. Online support consists of a pen pal program, where widowed individuals correspond via email for peer support, a blog that is written by several different widowed people, online forums for 24 hour social support, and a variety of social media platforms. Soaring Spirits has regional social events that provide an opportunity for in-person gatherings with other widowed people in the local community for understanding, friendship, and peer support (the Lehigh Valley Chapter can be contacted via email at soaringspiritslvpa@yahoo.com). Soaring Spirits programs are designed to connect widowed people with each other, based on the powerful connections of shared experiences.
